

THE PREHISTORIC SOCIETY

Founded in 1935, the Prehistoric Society now has an international membership of around 2000 members. The Society's interests are world-wide and extend from the earliest human origins to the emergence of written records.

Membership is open to all, and includes professional, amateur, student and retired members from over 40 countries. An active, annual programme of events including lectures, study tours, research weekends and receptions, allows members to participate fully in the Society and to meet other members and interested parties.

The Society produces two publications: the annual journal, Proceedings of the Prehistoric Society and the newsletter PAST. Annual research, conference and travel awards are available to members to enable excavations, research, visits to conferences and travel abroad to sites and museums.
